

COFFIN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL May Newsletter

Issue Eight - 2014-15

May 2015

Hello Coffin School Families,

I hope that this finds you well.

If you haven't had a chance to already, I encourage you to take a few moments and savor the Coffin School Art Show that's currently gracing our hallways. Every child has a self-selected piece of artwork in the show and has included a brief explanation of why they've chosen the particular piece. Students are constantly pausing in the hallway to enjoy their own artwork and to point out what they like in others. One first-grader summed it up nicely the other day when he said, "I just love, love all the artwork in the halls!" There's talk of an evening art walk next year to accompany the show and in the meantime, if you're looking to enjoy even more Coffin School art, please visit Mrs. Crosby's webpage (<http://www.brunswick.k12.me.us/acrosby/>).

We expect that school and town budgets will be finalized this week and anticipate that impacts to Coffin School will include the reduction of one literacy interventionist (a position that will not be filled after a retirement) and a shift from a proposed full-time psychologist to a half-time psychologist. While budget processes are always challenging (and occasionally a bit stressful), it's heartening to see all the internal planning that's been going on here at Coffin for months to set us up for next year's success.

May is also the month for incoming Kindergarten Information Night and Kindergarten screening. Both were well-attended and we're expecting to welcome approximately 175 new students and families into Coffin School this fall. Kudos to our Kindergarten teachers, our support staff, and to our families for making this such a positive and productive transition into the Brunswick School District.

It's hard to believe we're beginning to approach the end of another school year - still lots of learning ahead.
